SIXTH SUNDAY OF EASTER (A) - Mass Book Pg 148

(Acts 8:5-8, 14-17, 1 Peter 3:15-18, John 14:15-21)

This Thursday is the day when Our Lord ascended to heaven, 40 days after his resurrection. This is one of the great days in the year, when we are expected to make every effort to be present at Mass (10am and 8pm). On Easter Day we celebrated a hidden event, an event without parallel which defies description or depiction. The Ascension of Our Lord is a little different: Luke gives us two accounts - at the end of his gospel and at the beginning of the Acts of the Apostles - of our Lord literally ascended to heaven having taken the disciples up to the top of a hill. We can picture them staring up into the sky, after he had been hidden from view by a cloud, hoping perhaps for another glimpse of him, disappearing into a tiny dot, like a balloon that has been released into the sky.

If the idea of Jesus floating up into the sky strike us as slightly odd, when we know that heaven is not really a place up above us, let us consider what this event teaches us about Jesus' humanity and his divinity - and our humanity too. For this is an event as real as any other in the earthly life of Our Lord, part of the drama of the resurrection and what we collectively term the 'Paschal Mystery'. Although in his risen, glorified body Jesus seems able to appear in closed rooms at will, and presumably disappear too, it was necessary to show to the disciples that he was now returning to the Father who had sent him into the world. From this point onwards they would experience his presence in a new, different way, through the working of the Holy Spirit - the Advocate or Paraclete who Jesus speaks of at the Last Supper. It is also part of the drama of the incarnation, marking the end of the 30 or so years in which Jesus lived among us and walked this earth. In the incarnation, the Son of God became fully human without diminishing his divinity. In Mary's womb, God and man became one person. As a man, God suffered the agony of the cross, was buried, and rose triumphantly from the grave. When his work on earth was finished, he ascended to the place from which he had come, but this was not a reversal of the incarnation. Christ's human nature is not merely a vehicle for his earthly mission, or like a garment, to be laid aside. No: the Son of God ascended to heaven as man, just as he was born, lived, suffered and died as man, and rose as man. But the Ascension also shows that this man is not just a teacher or even a great prophet. He is truly God and is returning to his rightful place. Human and divine nature, joined together when Mary consented to her unique part in God's plan of salvation, can never be separated. And the incarnate son of God will come again in the fullness of time to bring all things to completion.

The permanence of the incarnation, revealed by Christ's bodily ascension into heaven, also tells us something about our own humanity. Our human nature is essentially good, and has the potential to be raised up to the heights of heaven. Not by our initiative or merits, but through the infinite grace of God who has made us for this. God is not changed by the incarnation, but our human nature is glorified and perfected through this intimate contact with God. Our destiny is with Christ: when he rose from the tomb, our humanity rose with him; when he ascended to heaven our humanity ascended with him. In Christ, our own perfection and glorification is anticipated. Where he is gone, we hope to follow. And this hope will be fulfilled in each one of us if we allow him to live in us now.

Finally, we should notice how the disciples, encouraged by their final encounter with the Lord, go out into the world with a new sense of purpose, eagerly awaiting the promised gift of the Holy Spirit. Our Lord's parting words, found at the conclusion of Matthew's gospel, contain both a command and a promise: make disciples of all the nations; and know that I am with you always. Christ has not abandoned his church, but has ensured his presence among his people in every place and time, above all through the gift of his Body and Blood in the Mass. God bless, Fr Matthew.
